It's been a while since I've see you
Look a lot lighter on your feet
The cat gone and stole your last life
(Minus ten million odds from your gamble)

Your simple every days wound about clockwise to the throat
It leaves a choke for a memory
Why do thieves grow up and steal the one thing
To cut you free

To you a seed, you weep now
You've wept everyone's tears
Your sorrow-filling weakness

One in fifteen star filled skies
One in season left to wilt like our lives in fast forward

To be true to what you are is taking these whirlwinds by the throat to find
They beat you down, full of doubt

Oh my mind shifts through the weeds of this news Through the fields of yesterday and Diane, it seems to me life is your mystery
