

I'm going overboard
this ship is definitely sinking the warning signs were ignored engage your life vest I think it's time to pull the chord the undertow slowly pulls us down as our faces disappear into the sea I could still perceive the glow of city lights but you and I could never agree and then it hits you in the face somehow you didn't know before another day stuck in outer space it's starting to show more and more I'm going overboard
you see a tragedy is more than something that tears us apart and somehow brings others closer together you see the human condition to believe in more like divine intervention should never stop us from controlling our destiny another wave crashes on my forehead submerged my body sinks into the sea
next thing I know the water's gone exhausted I lay upon the beach I see the line between futility and survival within reach
